HISTORICAL SKETCH.

DARTMOUTH COLLEGE grew up from a very small germ. Eleazar Wheelock, a half-paid Congregational minister in Lebanon, Connecticut, cherishing an earnest desire to do good beyond the limits of his parish, procured, by the aid of a missionary in New Jersey, two Indian boys in order to give them a Christian education. This was in December, 1754. Others were soon added, until the enterprise became a school, numbering at one time as many as twenty-two Indian youths of both sexes. Meanwhile Joshua Moor of Mansfield gave a house and two acres of land, and the school was named Moor's Indian Charity School.

It early entered Wheelock's mind to educate also English youths as missionaries to the tribes, and in 1764 his school consisted of thirty scholars, only about half of them Indians. His purpose developed into the bold plan of training these Indians, not only by a Christian education, but in the arts and ways of civilized life, so that, returning to their tribes accompanied by English missionaries, they might form the basis of a general elevation.

His enterprise attracted attention and interest, and funds came to him both from home and foreign sources. Attempts to procure a charter from Connecticut or from England proved unsuccessful. A board of trustees, however, was in some way constituted in England, with the Earl of Dartmouth at its head, and in due time a fund of some ten thousand pounds was raised and committed to their charge. As Wheelock's plans expanded, he began to feel the need of a change of location. The knowledge of his purpose brought him proposals from many quarters. After careful investigations, explorations and consultations, the field was narrowed to the region of 'Cowas', (Coos) and finally to Hanover, although a location further north was recommended by the trustees in England.

The reasons for this general and special choice appear to have been these: comparative nearness to the Canadian Indians; "convenient transportation up and down the [Connecticut] River"; the probable need of ministers and a college for "more than two hundred towns, chartered, settled and about to settle"; the offer of large amounts of land in and about Hanover, as well as of a whole township given by the Governor and Council (though the title afterwards proved invalid); the attractiveness of the "fertile plain" at Hanover; and finally and perhaps chiefly, the assurance of a charter.

The charter was given by Governor John Wentworth in the name of King George III. and bore the date of December 13, 1769. A draft of the charter submitted by Wheelock received important modifications from the Governor. In particular he rejected the suggestion of a co-ordinate board of trustees in Great Britain. He gave to the college the name of Lord Dartmouth, its most active patron in Great Britain, although Wheelock had proposed to the Governor to call it by the name of Wentworth, an honor the Governor had well earned; and instead of incorporating it as a "school" or "academy," he adopted a hint from Wheelock's postscript and made it a "college." The first board of trustees consisted of the Governor and Council, and six Congregational ministers, the latter constituting one half of the board.

In August 1770 Wheelock came to Hanover, soon followed by his family and his students, made a small clearing in the vast pine forest, and housed his family in a "hut of logs eighteen feet square," while his pupils slept on hemlock boughs, beneath a ceiling of loose boards laid upon poles, till somewhat better accommodations could be provided. The winter found them with the school building but partly completed. But the work of study had commenced in December, and Dartmouth College was already under way. The first class of four graduated in 1771, having apparently come from Yale. The first commencement was attended by the Royal Governor and a company of gentlemen from Portsmouth, who made their way through almost trackless forests.

The war of the Revolution and its antecedents cut off the attendance of the native tribes, interfered with the receipts from Great Britain, and caused much embarrassment. In ten years from the foundation of the college Dr. Wheelock* died, worn out with exhausting cares and labors. At that time the whole property of the college, if sold, would not have paid its indebtedness. John Wheelock, LL.D., the son of Eleazar Wheelock, succeeded to the presidency and to an inherited debt which in 1789 amounted to $30,000, and was partly relieved by a legislative grant of a township of wild lands. The removal of Dr. John Wheelock by the trustees, after a presidency of thirty-six years, was followed by the famous lawsuit of the college with the State of New Hampshire in which the decision of the supreme court of New Hampshire, sustaining the acts of the legislature, was reversed by the supreme court of the United States. The college was well nigh impoverished when the suit was gained, while President Francis Brown (1815-1820) was broken down by the strain and died soon after. Dr. Daniel Dana held the office about one year and retired. Dr. Bennett Tyler resigned after a presidency of six years; Dr. Nathan Lord after a presidency of thirty-seven years. Dr. Asa D. Smith, after nearly fourteen years of service, resigned a few months before his death, and was succeeded in 1877 by Dr. Samuel C. Bartlett, the present incumbent of the office.

*He received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from the University of Edinburgh.

With the College there have been gradually associated several other institutions:

The DARTMOUTH MEDICAL COLLEGE dates its origin from the establishment, in 1788, of a professorship of medicine by the Trustees of the College. Dr. Nathan Smith was elected in the same year to fill the chair. With little assistance, he gave lectures in all the branches of medicine then known. It was a bold enterprise for a young physician, single-handed and alone, to undertake, but after twelve years of remarkable labor Dr. Smith was rewarded by seeing the school firmly established and other professorships created. Classes have been graduated annually without interruption. Full courses of lectures, both didactic and clinical, are given in all departments of medical science. After the completion of the Mary Hitchcock Hospital, in process of erection, increased facilities for clinical instruction will be afforded.

THE CHANDLER SCHOOL OF SCIENCE AND THE ARTS was established in 1851 by a resolution of the Trustees, in acceptance of a sum bequeathed to them in trust by Abiel Chandler, Esq., "for the establishment and support of a permanent department or school of instruction in the college, in the practical and useful arts of life." The degree of B. S. is conferred after a course of four years' study based on the sciences and the modern languages, including French and German.

In 1866 the NEW HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE AND THE MECHANIC ARTS was established by an act of the Legislature, on the basis of the Congressional Land Grant, authorizing its location in Hanover, and connection with Dartmouth College. Its Board of Trustees is appointed partly by the Governor and Council, and partly by the Corporation of Dartmouth College. It confers the degree of B. S. after a four years' course. This institution was early aided by the gift of a valuable farm and a large sum of money from John Conant, Esq., and recently by the location in connection with it of the Agricultural Experiment Station maintained by an annual appropriation of $15,000 by the National Government.

The THAYER SCHOOL OF CIVIL ENGINEERING, established in 1867, aims to provide an exclusively professional training for young men who may desire instruction of an advanced character. The course is essentially post-graduate. Its object is to aid in meeting the increased demand for men who, by thorough preparation, are qualified for rapid advancement to responsible and difficult service. The funds available for this school were donated by the late General Sylvanus Thayer.

The total number of instructors (including lecturers) in all these institutions at the present time is forty-eight, and the number of public buildings is fourteen. The present number of undergraduates in the College is two hundred and forty-two, and the total number of students in the College and associated institutions is four hundred and seventeen.
